Subject: RE: New glyphosate study

Dear 5.1.2.e

Thank you for this information, this is very helpful. Of course, the Ctgb appreciation will be considered provisional in relation to a full review of the study including the raw data. An appreciation from our national competent authority is, in view of the current media and political attention, a logical first step.

Best regards,

Dear 5.1.2.e

Indeed, we are aware of this study and have seen the media coverage. We will write to EFSA and ECHA to ask them to contact the Ramazzini Institute and request access to all the relevant data and then for them to review it. Such assessments will take some time. You may recall that we did the same in November 2023, when the Ramazzini Institute initially announced some findings in a press conference - but the data was not made available to the agencies at that time, or since.

You mention that CTGB will provide an appreciation in two weeks. Since that will be based only on the information in the published article, and not taking into account the full (raw) data, it should be presented as provisional, considering that a full review by the EU agencies involving also MS experts - including in the context of all other data - will require more time.

Best,

5.1.2.e

Subject: New glyphosate study
Importance: High

Dear 5.1.2.e

How are you? You are probably aware of the new glyphosate study from the Ramazzini institute:
<https://ehjournal.biomedcentral.com/articles/10.1186/s12940-025-01187-2>

This study gets a lot of attention in the media and in our Parliament. Ctgb is already reviewing the study and will give an appreciation within 2 weeks. Do you perhaps know if the Commission has already asked EFSA to look at the publication? Or is this a next step that is still to be taken?

Already thanks for your clarification.

Best wishes,
